

* Type in or paste your brief comments

The internet is not broken in its current functioning manner. This action to limit the internet's speed to anyone not able to pay the large amount that cable companies are going to charge is just to give the large companies more money. This will end up kicking more college students, working single parents, and any other person off the internet because they can't pay for the proper speed to write their research paper or learn about new political candidates. All internet users and MAJOR companies, such as Google, do not want this and will fight this to the best of their ability.

